

ELECTRICAL UTILITY DISTRIBUTION

Over the next decade, spend for transmission lines and substations will be historic, driven by renewable energy, load growth and congestion relief. Likewise, the supply chain challenges associated with product availability and management of large-scale construction projects will reach new levels of complexity.

We understand how utility distributors help their customers improve their supply chain by increasing efficiencies and taking cost out while they focus on important issues such as reliability, cybersecurity, environmental regulation, aging infrastructure and emerging technology.

While WireXpress does not sell utility-centric products such as transformers, poles and metering products, we do sell products and technologies that your customers use every day, which complement what you already sell them and can further consolidate more of their spend into your basket.
